

A behind-the-scenes account of the decline and fall of a once great studio, tracing MGM's corporate convulsions from 20 years ago, when Kirk Kerkorian bought control to the present, the financial disasters of Yentl, Mrs Soffel and 2010 and the final take over by Pathe. In 1983 MGM/UA was in the midst of a comeback. Under the new management of Frank Yablans the company had secured assurances of financial backing from CEO-financier Kirk Kerkorian and a series of dazzling new movies was in development. Top stars like Jack Nicholson, Barbara Streisand and Mel Gibson were on the programme, a sequel to the cult classic 2001 was planned and Wargames was in release. What nobody anticipated was that Kerkorian, ever the smart Las Vegas game-player, had evolved his own scheme to harness Hollywood's myth making machinery to his own personal ends. The end result was that Kerkorian emerged a billionaire and his companies emerged a shambles. The films anticipated to be immense successes - Yentl, Mrs Soffel and 2010 - turned out to be financial disasters of immense proportions. The Nicholson movie never even got made and the success of Wargames couldn't compensate for the extent of the disaster.
